THE MAKING OF AN LP CONGA

LP has incorporated decades of research, development, and numerous structural subtleties into our wood and fiberglass drums, making them the best by design. The experience gained from over 50 years of manufacturing professional level percussion products is apparent in the unequaled quality of every conga drum from Latin Percussion.

Wood Congas

Our drums are made from the highest quality woods: select North American Ash and Siam Oak, chosen for sound quality and durability. Before manufacturing, the wood is kiln dried to ensure structural integrity and long life. Once seasoned, the wood is cut into precisely measured strips called staves which are layered into multiple plies and glued together. A steam press bends them into the shape of the drum. LP's custom-designed machines create a compound-miter cut, joining the wood properly and ensuring an extremely durable shell.

Internal steel reinforcement pins eliminate the need for bands around the exterior of the drum. This process is unique to LP and creates a drum with superior structural integrity. Each drum is placed onto a lathe, and turned into its final form. Every conga is painstakingly sanded to a smooth finish making it appear seamless. Special attention is paid to the drum's bearing (upper) edge which enhances the overall sound quality and keeps the head from tearing.

LP wood congas have a layer of fiberglass added to the inside of the shell where the side-plates are located. This increases the strength of the shell at the highest stress area. The interior is then sealed with a special finish to prevent moisture absorption, allowing the drum to stand up to harsh playing conditions and climate changes. Stain is then applied, by hand, to the exterior. Multiple coats of polyurethane are applied to seal the wood. Each coat is sanded between applications, providing a glass-like sheen.

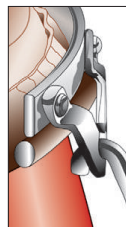

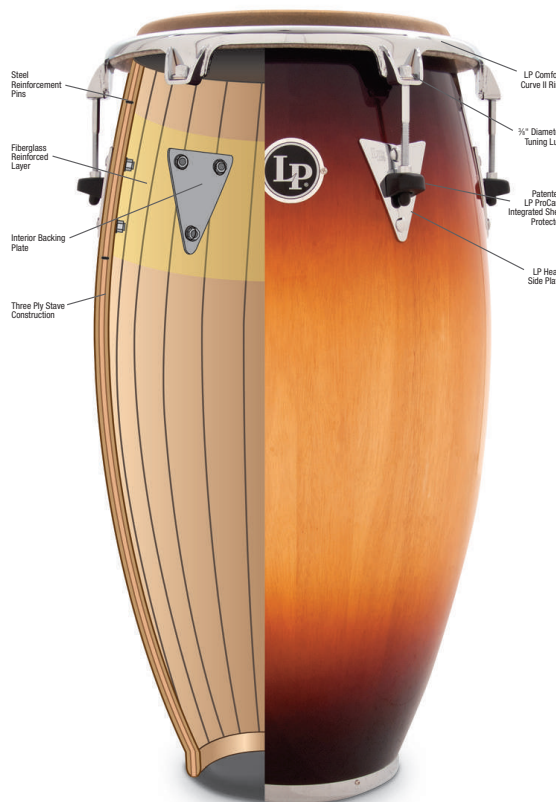

Fiberglass Congas

The construction of fiberglass drums was first popularized and refined by Latin Percussion in the 1960s. These drums have traveled the world and become renowned for their strength, beauty, and loud, bright sound. They begin with drum molds that are maintained to assure the highest quality finish. Colored, liquid gel coat is applied to the inside of the mold to a carefully controlled thickness, creating a drum that has a long lasting, deep color.

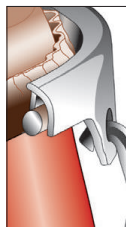

Alternating layers of matte and woven fiberglass are applied by hand, using the finest, virgin fiberglass. A high fiberglass-to-polyester resin ratio makes the congas stronger and less prone to warping. "Percussive" testing is performed to make sure there are no air voids in the shell that would weaken it. Only LP fiberglass conga shells have a steel ring embedded at the bearing edge of each drum for added strength, making the drum able to withstand years of road use.

Rim Evolution

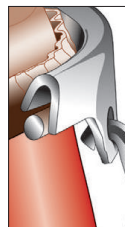

Hand drums had always used traditional-style steel rims. The flat, upright design (see Figure 1) of these rims can be especially hard on a player's hands. After years of research, LP introduced the patented LP Comfort Curve II rim (see Figure 2). This updated and patented design has a broad top edge with a gentle, large radius curve that takes the pain out of playing and reduces calluses. The high-strength steel is 4mm thick and its unique design and high-tech construction makes it the strongest rim manufactured. Further research resulted in a modification to the Comfort Curve II rim. The Extended Collar Comfort Curve II rim extends the distance between the bearing edge and the rim. This breakthrough allows for increased tonal range while providing even greater comfort (see Figure 2). Matador drums have Matador Soft Strike rims (see Figure 3). LP Aspire drums offer the LP Aspire EZ Curve rims (see Figure 4). The redesigned LP Aspire EZ Curve rim has a rolled interior edge that holds the skinwire firm and even. Matador rims are crafted of heavier gauge steel than LP Aspire. Both rim styles are more rounded in shape than traditional rims, making them more comfortable to play.
